Commander's Column

Welcome to this first South Dakota Wing Roundup issue of 2023. In many ways, 2022 was a reopening of Civil Air Patrol.

We maintained full mission readiness throughout the COVID era, but in 2022, we could get back to regular business with more extensive training, better planning, and rebuilding relationships. Membership has also returned close to pre-COVID levels, as it has nationally for CAP.

Col. Michael Marek,
CAP, South Dakota
Wing Commander

In Civil Air Patrol, we have three major program areas, sometimes called our “missions” and South Dakota Wing pursues all three aggressively. They are the Emergency Services operational mission program, the youth program called the Cadet Program, and Aerospace Education for members and external audiences.

- > South Dakota Wing flew highly-effective operational missions in 2022, including multiple missing persons searches, training exercises with the 114th Fighter Wing of the South Dakota National Guard, airborne photography of an F-16 crash site in Sioux Falls, and a low-level route survey for Ellsworth AFB. Our drone program also achieved Full Mission Capability, offering photography and mapping by small photography drones with a nationally-standardized training curriculum.
- > Our cadet competition team represented CAP's North Central Region at the national cadet competition, performing well. Our cadets and senior members joined in a large youth program cadet encampment, along with members from several wings.
- > Our Aerospace Education program engaged with hundreds of people at Discover Aviation Day in Sioux Falls and the Ellsworth AFB airshow. We also held our own Aerospace Education weekend, and unit-level Aerospace and STEM Education is ongoing.

My thanks and appreciation for everything our South Dakota CAP leaders and members do to serve our communities, state, tribes, and nation.

In addition to CAP's operational missions, drones play an important role in the South Dakota Wing cadet and aerospace education programs. Giving members of the public and cadets the opportunity to fly drones stimulates interest in aerospace, STEM, and in CAP membership.

Positive governmental relations is a priority for Civil Air Patrol. Once a year, all wing commanders travel to Washington DC to meet with members of Congress to update them on CAP's work in South Dakota and to ask for their support for CAP's Congressional appropriation. Here, Col. Michael Marek, SDWG commander, meets with US Senator John Thune in the US Capitol Building.

Military-style customs and courtesies are a vital part of the discipline of CAP leadership training. Here, cadets at the Joint Dakota Encampment “dress right, dress.”

Each summer, cadets travel to a week-long encampment, in which they learn teamwork and leadership. The encampment program typically also includes orientation flights, aerospace, cybersecurity, and physical fitness. South Dakota and North Dakota take turns hosting the Joint Dakota encampment. Encampment attendance is required to become a CAP cadet officer.

One of the ways CAP cadets learn about aerospace education and STEM is the model rocketry program, including rocket history, rocket science, and the safe building, launching, and recovery of model rockets in three stages.

Cadets progress through each stage through written exams and various hands-on activities. Once they complete all tasks, cadets are authorized to wear the Rocketry Badge/patch on their uniforms.

South Dakota Wing has several flight simulators around the state. They are used for internal Aerospace Education, as well as public AE events.

The heritage of South Dakota Wing goes back to World War II when the fledgling CAP carried military dispatches on courier flights to flight training bases around South Dakota. South Dakota CAP pilots are pictured here at Fort Meade, near Sturgis, SD.

South Dakota Wing's unmanned drone systems can be programmed to overfly an area and create 3D images and maps, which can then be turned and steered. This capability can be valuable to emergency managers who want continuous or 360 degrees coverage of a target area.

Radio communications is vital for CAP because emergency services staff cannot depend on commercial communications channels, which may easily be stressed or fail in disaster situations. Therefore, South Dakota Wing has its own radio systems for internal Command and Control Communications and direction-finding radio equipment for emergency locator transmitters from missing aircraft.

The South Dakota Wing cadet competition team placed in the top 10 at Civil Air Patrol's National Cadet Competition in Ohio this month. The team, from Sioux Falls Composite Squadron (SFCS), had previously earned the right to represent North Central Region in the region cadet competition this spring. The demanding competition included a uniform inspection, drill test, indoor demonstrations, a presentation on a CAP service project, and an extemporaneous speech event, as well as a mile run, other fitness tests, a written exam, and a drone proficiency demonstration. Here, the teams takes a well-deserved break.

CAP Provides Essential Service in South Dakota

Civil Air Patrol helped pinpoint where Amy Dougherty's body was found.

Amy Dougherty's family saw her for the last time when she left for work, driving in blizzard conditions. She never arrived, triggering a search along the icy back roads from her home in Andover to her job in Bristol.

"CAP scrambled aircrews and made multiple visual search flights in the Andover-Bristol area at the request of the Day County Sheriff's Department via the South Dakota Department of Emergency Management," said Lt. Col. Jeremy Langrock, then South Dakota Wing's director of operations.

The entire state prayed for Dougherty and her family as news media reported on the search, including CAP's role. CAP aircrews flew route and grid searches along the road

Dougherty usually drove and also checked possible alternate routes.

CAP's National Cell Phone Forensics Team provided a last known position for Dougherty's phone. Divers found her vehicle and body concealed under the ice in a slough bordering the road, very close to the location pinpointed by CAP.

"The Dougherty family has been extremely grateful for the efforts of CAP," said Lt. Col. Gary Rae, a South Dakota Wing chaplain in contact with the family during the mission. "Our responding to every call or missing person has a profound and lasting gratitude from family members that cannot be expressed in words."

"I think what we did on this mission exemplifies CAP's core values," said Lt. Col. Todd Epp, incident commander for the sorties. "I had no problems getting trained CAP crews — even over the Christmas holiday — to volunteer to help find Amy. We are a force for good."

CAP's aircraft can be used for missing person searches, air-to-ground damage assessment photography, and other essential operational missions at a fraction of the cost of alternatives, Epp said.

CAP's South Dakota Wing searched for four missing individuals during fiscal 2021, including another search in the Bristol area as well as in Manderson and Wanblee.
